FORT MISSOULA

Please join us for an interesting and entertaining presentation. The focus of the presentation will be on Fort Missoula and genealogical records.

British Soldiers, American Revolution

Anyone interested in American history might enjoy Don N. Hagist's online blog, entitled British Soldiers, American Revolution. It details the experiences of many of the enlisted men who were part of the British government's effort to hold onto those thirteen rebellious North American colonies.

The British military record keeping of the eighteenth century often captured the reports and stories of officers but rarely did so for enlisted men. Hagist searches for records wherever he can find them.

Many of the men described in this blog eventually became Americans. Some deserted, others were captured as prisoners of war and then escaped, eventually disappearing into the American countryside where they were assimilated into American society. Some remained in British garrisons and continued serving as soldiers of the King.

Eneclann and Ancestor Network

The following announcement was written by Eneclann and the Ancestor Network:

In August 2012, the NLI hosted the "20x20" lunchtime series of talks on Irish family history.

Organized by Eneclann and Ancestor Network, the assembled experts included genealogists and broadcasters, librarians and archivists, writers and publishers, academics and a medical geneticist. The wide range of expertise on show every day was a show-case of Irish genealogy at its best.

Each expert held the floor for 20 minutes, and spoke about an aspect of their own work and its relevance for Irish family history. Each talk was followed by a Q&A session, which gave the audience direct access to the speaker.

As the month progressed, it became clear that the lunchtime talks drew a regular home (Irish) audience in attendance every day, as well as overseas visitors attending two or more of the lectures while they stayed in Dublin.

The response from the audience at the end of the series in August was overwhelming, and the most frequently asked question was whether the speakers would provide notes on their talks, or otherwise make them available.

In response to the feedback that we received in August, we are now making available the overheads of each of the talks or a synopsis, available online at the National Library's webpage, and also on www.eneclann.ie/20x20

We hope that this will become an online resource for all those involved in Irish family history, and will promote knowledge and use of the main collections of historical records for research.

One story I found interesting was that of Alexander Robinson of the 57th Regiment of Foot. He deserted the Regiment in 1770 while stationed in Dublin, Ireland. He was captured and tried as a deserter seven years later north of Albany, New York, as one of a group of 300 American prisoners of war. How he traveled from Ireland to America apparently was not documented.

Those who remained in America often married and raised families. It is possible you could find an ancestor listed in the British Soldiers, American Revolution. Regardless of whether or not your own ancestor is listed, reading the articles will provide great insight into the harsh conditions these men endured and will give a greater appreciation of the lives they led.
